Walmington-on-Sea was a seaside town. Located on the channel coast of England, it was part of the national "front line" following the evacuation of the British Expeditionary Force from Dunkirk during the Second World War. Walmington-on-Sea had a pleasure pier, with a 20-foot-wide gap (6.1 m) blown in the middle to prevent it from being used as a landing stage by invading forces. The beach is ...

Dad's Army is a classic British sitcom which ran from 1968 to 1977 on BBC 1. The show, set during the Second World War, was based around the activities of the Home Guard (formerly Local Defence Volunteers) a reserve army unit established to slow down landing German troops in the event of a land invasion which, in 1939 and 1940, was a very real threat.

I have a great soft-spot for the episode A Soldier's Farewell which came near the middle of the fifth series of Dad's Army and was first broadcast on 20th October 1972. The fifth series was a little less consistently good than the third and fourth series and Perry and Croft began mining less obvious themes to build their storylines around.

'DAD'S ARMY' (1968-77) The BBC hit series Dad's Army ran for nine seasons, from 1968 until 1977. It started rather lamely and it must have been a touch and go decision to continue with it after the first season. The acting was so-so, the screenplays generally quite poor, and the direction pretty amateurish in that first year.
